In its transcendent mysteriousness the divine dissolves. two apparently opposite aspects that are dramatically perceived ... and the terrible vixen who threatens with her bloodied, upraised sword." -David R. Kinsley, The Sword and the Flute.

Synopsis: The Sword and the Flute is a 1959 Indian documentary film directed by James Ivory. It explores the development of Indian miniature paintings, tracing their roots back to the Moghul invasion of India. The film highlights the intricate details and artistic techniques used in creating these paintings, showcasing the beauty and precision of Indian art.

In the context of Indian miniature paintings, the Sword and Flute film offers a unique perspective on the evolution of this art form within the courts of Akbar (1542-1605), who united what is now India and Pakistan, and his son Jahangir (1569-1627). Two schools of the miniature paintings ... and the adored divine bridegroom, which is one of the symbols as represented by the universality.

The Sword and the Flute film was produced by the Government of India's National Council of Educational Research and Training (NCERT) in collaboration with the Indian Council for Cultural Relations (ICCR) and the Government of Pakistan.
