The piston rings themselves only cost between $30 to $150 for the parts. However, most of the replacement cost has to do with the labor behind it. Since the piston rings are inside of your engine, this means an auto mechanic will need to remove the engine from your vehicle and disassemble it so they can access the worn-out piston rings.

Even though the piston rings are cheap, almost all of the costs will be in the labor involved since it can sometimes take longer than 10 hours to pull apart the engine and put it back together again. For those who want to complete the job themselves, piston rings will come in a complete set, often retailing for $75 to as much as $200; again, depending on the factors mentioned earlier. At AutoZone, for example, a sealed power piston ring set retails for about $40 to $80. Keep in mind these ...
